To whom it may concern:

I have known Marcie for 5 years. During that time, she has been the lead moderator for the online forum for my first book, The 4-Hour Workweek, and she helped staff and coordinate a four-day conference that I held for 130 high-caliber international attendees and speakers. It was a complex event and cost $7,000-10,000 per seat, so expectations were high. Everyone was supremely happy with how it turned out.

Most recently, she completed an assignment researching and compiling information related to the sunsetting of the forum that she has taken such good care of over the years.

At all times I have found Marcie to be dependable, hardworking, conscientious, honest, and courteous. I am happy to recommend her for any position she deems a good fit for her abilities.

In particular, she has specific talent and knowledge in the areas of virtual working and personal health (in short), which are two of the overarching themes of my two books.

All the best,
